The video game console RedOctane's Make Music interactive music system, first released in 2000 and last updated in 2006, was designed as a way to introduce children to music production by allowing them to program music with a computer and a keyboard. It contains more than 10,000 music kits, arranged into 35 musical categories including instrument types, dances, music styles, animals, and holidays. The Make Music hardware can be used with a computer or a Macintosh, and offers two programs of varying complexity: a sequencing program and a recorder program. The kits allow for the creation of music with detailed waveforms and other effects. The program was not available on mobile devices until the release of Makenna, which was released for iOS, Android, and Windows Phone in 2014, supported by the university. First a university program at Indiana University, in 2012 Make Music was released to the public without the university's involvement. The public's reception of the program was generally positive, although the Make Music software is only available for personal computers. In 2013 the program's creator, Joe Houser, announced Make Music for the Web, which allows web visitors to access the software and generate music using the Make Music hardware. The webservice also allows visitors to share their music with others. Make Music has been seen as part of a larger trend of the adoption of music making applications, such as the virtual music technology USB Audio Toy by Adafruit. While the applications have been praised for introducing children to computer music production, some commentators have criticized Make Music for allowing children to create potentially dangerous music. The program's musical kits were originally developed for all ages, with sound effects developed to cater to young children as well as adults. To help counter potential negative effects that music making would have on young children, such as their ability to focus, the kits feature lots of upbeat music that is suited to being performed with a toy keyboard. The Make Music program was initially developed in-house by the Center for Computer Research in Music and Acoustics at Indiana University, using an earlier iteration of the RedOctane platform, which was released in 1997. The MAKE MUSIC hardware has been discontinued by RedOctane, and has been replaced with other software. Houser has received praise for the Make Music program, but has also been criticized for making it difficult for music makers to delete their creations after having them published. A previous version of the program contained a feature that allowed creators to specify whether their creations can

Is there any way to get free robux? A: Unfortunately, the answer is no, but I've found a working method for you to use to get free robux. I'll explain. First, you need the Robux Insiders Club. This is pretty easy, just visit Roblox and scroll down to the red slash icon, after you click it, you will be able to see the "Roblox Insiders Club" page. You need the "New" and "premium" membership. I've found that if you use the "New" membership, it will give you free robux and no ads. It's easy to do, just make sure you don't pay for it. Next, you need to get the "Pump It Up" cheat, then you'll be able to get 50 free robux. The best way to get this, is by using the Roblox Hack, the trick is to go to Hacks/ForceInvite and click the "Pump It Up" hack (it'll only last you a short while). You can also subscribe to "Pump It Up" if you are going to post it in groups/forums. So there you have it. Free robux. I hope this helps. Good luck! Q: AngularJS - Remove all list items from all lists Basically, I am trying to achieve this: A little explanation: I am using Twitter Bootstrap, where I have three nested lists: List One List Two List Three
