.Q: Hide client-side form input field from server-side validation I have a required field in a client-side form, but it's hidden, and only the server-side validation of the form is used. If the field is checked or undefined, then the form is validated. Would it be wrong to use this? So that even if the form is submitted, the hidden field is not submitted. A: Is your field hidden with the type attribute set to "hidden" (not "text")? Clients may use `element.type=hidden` to identify input fields that should not be submitted. The type of the field must be set to hidden, and this attribute must be set on the form element's element. You should be fine. If this field is not required, you could also put the id of the field in the submit button's value. Then, the user will be able to submit the form without the field.

Severe hammering of the cochlea in a newborn. A neonatal patient was referred to a pediatric rehabilitation center for evaluation and treatment of irritability and excessive crying. During a routine audiologic evaluation, several minutes of continuous high-intensity white noise produced maximum thresholds at 4000 Hz and 3000 Hz. The patient complained of intolerance to any noise, even lower-intensity white noise, and absent middle-ear reflexes were observed. Computed tomography of the temporal bones showed severe cochlea damage. Six months later, the patient had no hearing loss and no middle-ear reflexes. The cerebrospinal fluid was strongly positive for viral antibodies. This case demonstrates that central nervous system damage can occur following heavy exposure to sound in newborns and that viral infections can cause severe hearing loss in the first few months of life.

A young New Zealand man has been jailed for more than four years for his part in the shooting and killing of the city's mayor. Seth Harawira, 28, was convicted of a lesser manslaughter charge in the shooting death of Don Mockerrrie last year, during a confrontation between Harawira and the city's mayor. Harawira and his co-accused, Louisa Tregaro, were convicted of manslaughter in April after evidence suggested Tregaro waited for a crowd of tourists to disperse before firing a single shot at the mayor's legs.
