the purpose of this study is to investigate the use of motherhood in contemporary nigerian literature, with particular focus on how motherhood is constructed as a metonym for nationhood, as a representation for emancipation and its applicability to other forms of cultural production. the use of motherhood in a specific cultural milieu (the african hausa belt) is examined as a function of the writer's gender, generation and location in order to look for a pattern in the transformation of the maternal relation in contemporary nigerian literature. the research method employed is literary studies method. the sources and methods of information are from literary journals and book chapters. this paper will show the nature and appearance of motherhood in three kinds of literature: short stories, non-fiction and fiction. the main methodological issue addressed is the concept of identity, especially women's identity, in contemporary nigerian literature. keywords: gender ; motherhood ; african literature ; hausa literature they're called jokers because they are unpredictable, and that's what makes them such fun to play, but using the cards can be a little tricky. your first thought might be to put the cards facedown on the table, but keep in mind that it can be tricky to look at all 52 cards at once and make sense of them, and that's where a joker can help. one of the most common approaches is to turn the cards over one at a time, keeping track of what you already know, and trying to turn over the lowest-numbered card. but, that can become a bit tricky as well, as you may learn the joker is actually the highest-numbered card in the deck. and if all the cards are faceup and you decide the lowest-numbered card is the joker, what does that mean for the rest of the deck? what is the joker? in ordinary card games, it's a particularly unlucky card that provides a bit of extra unpredictability, although it may be part of the dealer's stack. 5ec8ef588b
