Lightroom is a great application for storing, organizing and editing your digital photography. It has some nice features such as the ability to store your files within a person or organization. There's also the ability to tag and favorite images. If you have digital photos from a digital camera (DSLR, P&S, Camcorder), you are welcome to open them in Adobe Photoshop Elements. If (and this is a big "if") you have folders full of digital images, you can organize them using a variety of methods. You might have a folder for each month of the year, or for each month of the year. You may have several folder for an event or holiday, or a single folder for all the images of a person or group. Each folder has a one-click option to import the images from such a folder into Adobe's memory saving software. For me, this feature is a real timesaver. When I find myself with a free hour or two on the weekend, organizing and managing my images is fun. I can hold up my phone or tablet to the right of my computer monitor and swoop through a folder of photos (and videos, if I have them) in one quick swoop. I can pick a picture from that folder and use it as the basis for a new album by using the options beside the file name on my "hotspot." I can hear the sea, see the sky, feel the sand, smell a hint of lemon. I can hear my beloved dog, snoring. I can see my daughter's head in the corner of the (digital) frame. I can hear my wife's laugh. I can hear the birds in the foyer. I can't get enough. The lines between me and the images are blurred, and that's okay. Opening my computer and finding images on my computer reminds me that I live and breathe and I have a life. I can't imagine living my life without my camera. It's wonderful! I can make images or file them away unaltered so they don't lose the way they felt when I shot them. And then, when real life returns or my life's busy season has passed, I can open these images and replace them with a new set of images I've taken.
